

Getting ready for winter

The lake area was spared the first serious freezing precip of the season earlier this week. There were reports of snow sightings but nothing that caused any havoc as ground temperatures remained well above freezing. However, city of Lake Ozark Public Works crews are getting ready just in case the next blast of winter isn't so kind. Above left, Travis Shockley and Darryn Robertson get ready to attach a snow plow. Above right, Shockley grinds out a rusted bolt hole while (below right) Paul Distler does the same to another piece of equipment.
